Good morning Joanna.

Following on from our discussions yesterday I've put down some thoughts about anti-Semitism in a draft op-ed. I'm going to get some sleep and see what the morning brings before I think about any next steps. At this stage this hasn't gone to anybody but you, and it would be good to speak about where the Commission is on this issue at some point later today.

At the very least – it was helpful to write in terms of clarifying my thoughts.

Many thanks,
Lorraine.

Hi Lorraine

I've marked up some thoughts and saved on my Sharepoint drive.
After you have considered, you need to loop in Leanne, Darren, Tracey and Giri.

The first three are in a planning day.

This will need the weekend's reflections as well, at least about how best to achieve what you and the Commission seeks to do. A Personal Reflection on Anti-Semitism \(Draft Only\) \(22 March 2024\).docx.

Dear Leanne, Tracey & Darren,

Please find attached a draft piece that I have written, with some personal reflections on the current surge of anti-Semitism that we are seeing in Australia. I am proposing to submit this for publication, and would be intending to proceed with this later today.

I have been discussing this with both Ros and Giri since late last week, and have valued their reflections. I would similarly welcome any thoughts that you might have, and am available if needed to discuss this later afternoon (after the Commissioner's fortnightly meeting).

Hi Tracey,

In terms of the steps that need to be taken once I get confirmation about whether or not this is going to be published ...

Leanne has asked me to check with you whether opinion pieces fall within our existing policy in terms of the practice of circulating to all staff? And, if so, whether this is usually done before, at or after publication? I know that is the practice we are now following with respect to media releases, but we weren't sure what the normal practice is with respect to opinion pieces?

Many thanks,
 Lorraine.

Hi Lorraine, the policy isn't explicit about this but my thinking is that it would be circulated to staff when the publication/ outlet where it is being published advises us when it is live (noting there can be tweaks between the final version approved at Commission level and the published version eg. Headline can change or edits can be made to fit available space). Ideally we'd circulate the online link to the article or PDF if it's a print publication.

Cheers, Tracey

A Personal Reflection on anti-Semitism

Lorraine Finlay, Human Rights Commissioner

The foundation of universal human rights lies in recognising the inherent dignity and equal rights of every single human being.

Human rights can't be applied selectively. Every Australian – regardless of age, disability, gender, race, religion, or any other distinction – has the right to live freely and safely in this country. Racism has to be condemned no matter what form it takes, and no matter what individual or group happens to be the particular target.

But this even-handed application of principle should never stop us from directly calling out specific examples of racism. We cannot allow ourselves to be paralyzed by moral equivalence, or to sit in the silence that then allows racism to flourish.

What we have seen occurring in recent months in Australia is something that I never thought I would see in the country that I am so proud to call home. The Executive Council of Australian Jewry has reported an overwhelming increase in the number of reported anti-Semitic incidents since the brutal Hamas attack on October 7. What is even more horrifying is that those numbers alone don't reveal the full story. Those statistics aren't just abstract numbers, but represent real individuals and families who are feeling afraid, threatened, intimidated and unsafe.

Anti-Semitism has no place in Australia. It needs to be unequivocally condemned.

We have all seen the footage of the protestors at the Sydney Opera House, are aware of the doxxing that saw the personal information of 600 Jewish-Australians leaked from a private WhatsApp group, and saw pro-Palestinian activists choosing to demonstrate inside a Melbourne hotel where relatives of Israeli hostages were staying.

But we also need to be aware of the quieter forms of anti-Semitism that currently permeate the daily lives of Jewish people in Australia. These examples may not make media headlines, but their impact is profound. Whether it be the Jewish university students who have told me that they no longer feel safe or welcome on campus, the Jewish parents who have told their children not to say they are Jewish if asked when out in public, or the Jewish school students who have been advised not to wear their school uniforms on public transport for fear it will identify them as Jewish.

How could this be happening in Australia?

It is easy for these daily examples to go unnoticed by most Australians. Yet for the Jewish community it is impossible to escape and it impacts every aspect of their lives.

Of course, the Jewish community are not the only people in Australia currently experiencing immense grief and pain. In recent months, in my role as Australia's Human Rights Commissioner, I have met and spoken with a wide range of individuals and groups who have expressed different views about the ongoing war in Gaza and the Middle East, and who have been affected in different and often deeply personal ways. There has been unimaginable harm and suffering experienced by so many since October 7. My concern and compassion is not restricted to any one group.

But the surge in anti-Semitism, the depth of hostility that has been targeted towards the Jewish community, and the calculated and coordinated way that anti-Semitism is currently presenting in Australia is deeply disturbing and needs to be specifically repudiated.

It is not lost on me that at the very time we began to see anti-Semitism surging in Australia, in the aftermath of the October 7 attack, the world was also commemorating the 75th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Anti-Semitism repudiates the moral foundations of the Universal Declaration, which is grounded in a recognition of the dignity and worth of every individual. But it also directly repudiates the historical foundations of that document, which had its genesis in the aftermath of the Holocaust and the world's desire to ensure that those horrors would never again be repeated.

These universal values are needed more than ever. But they are profoundly undermined if we do not condemn the anti-Semitism that we are currently seeing in Australia.

This is not something that the Jewish community should be left to face alone. While anti-Semitism directly targets Jewish people, its impacts are much broader. It ultimately damages all of us by eroding our social fabric and undermining the peaceful diversity that is at the heart of modern Australia.

We all need to stand against anti-Semitism, and not allow hatred to make its home in Australia.

Hi Tracey,

In terms of the steps that need to be taken once I get confirmation about whether or not this is going to be published ...

Leanne has asked me to check with you whether opinion pieces fall within our existing policy in terms of the practice of circulating to all staff? And, if so, whether this is usually done before, at or after publication? I know that is the practice we are now following with respect to media releases, but we weren't sure what the normal practice is with respect to opinion pieces?

Many thanks,
Lorraine.

Subject: A Personal Reflection - Draft Piece [SEC=OFFICIAL]
Importance: High

Dear Leanne, Tracey & Darren,

Please find attached a draft piece that I have written, with some personal reflections on the current surge of anti-Semitism that we are seeing in Australia. I am proposing to submit this for publication, and would be intending to proceed with this later today.

I have been discussing this with both Ros and Giri since late last week, and have valued their reflections. I would similarly welcome any thoughts that you might have, and am available if needed to discuss this later afternoon (after the Commissioner's fortnightly meeting).

Kind regards,

Lorraine.
